EUNPDC Mission Statement

The EU Non-Proliferation and Disarmament Consortium (EUNPDC) forms the core of a wider network of European non-proliferation and disarmament think tanks and research centres, which today brings together over 100 institutions across Europe. It is managed jointly by the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI), the Fondation pour la Recherche Stratégique in Paris (FRS), the Istituto Affari Internazionali (IAI) in Rome, the International Institute for Strategic Studies (IISS) in London, the Peace Research Institute (HSFK/ PRIF) in Frankfurt, and the Vienna Center for Disarmament and Non-Proliferation (VCDNP), in close cooperation with the European External Action Service (EEAS) and the Foreign Policy Instrument (FPI) of the European Commission.

The Consortium and the Network aim to support the EU action to advance non-proliferation and disarmament. The mandate of the Consortium and the Network covers issues relating to weapons of mass destruction (WMD) but also to conventional arms, including small arms and light weapons (SALW).

The Consortium works through the organization of expert meetings, a major annual international conference, ad hoc seminars, the development of a dedicated website and various types of publications. It provides the EU with ad-hoc expertise and offers educational tools such as e-learning courses and internships. It also conducts various next generation activities, including a mentorship programme for young women. Finally, it is responsible for the organization of proliferation awareness trainings for specialists in natural sciences and other relevant fields and the arrangement of annual study visits to Brussels for participants in the UN Programme of Fellowships on Disarmament.

Six Leading Think Tanks

The Foundation for Strategic Research (FRS) was founded in 1998. It is an independent research centre and the leading French think tank on defense and security issues. Its team of experts in a variety of fields contributes to the strategic debate in France and abroad, and provides unique expertise across the board of defense and security studies. In the aera of international security, its specific focuses are security doctrines, arms control, proliferation/dissemination issues and challenges, non-proliferation regimes and policies (small arms, conventional weapons, biological and chemical weapons, nuclear weapons, and their delivery systems). The FRS maintains an active presence in the strategic debate through its publications, its website, and the events it regularly organizes. It takes part in a network of European and international research.

The Peace Research Institute in Frankfurt (PRIF), member of the Leibniz Association, is the largest as well as the oldest peace research institute in Germany. Founded in 1970, PRIF´s work is directed towards carrying out research on peace and conflict, with a special emphasis on issues of arms control, non-proliferation and disarmament. With a total staff of approximately 80, PRIF researchers have a long-standing experience in political advice and consulting, having served, inter alia, in German delegations to NPT, CTBT, CWC, BWC, Ottawa Convention and SALW gatherings, in the UN Advisory Council on Disarmament Matters and in IAEA Expert Groups. Today, PRIF's arms control division covers chemical, biological, nuclear and radiological weapons, small and light weapons, conventional weapons, drones, autonomous weapons, emerging technologies as well as mines and cluster ammunition.

The International Institute for Strategic Studies (IISS), founded in 1958, is an independent centre for research, information and debate on global security, political risk, and military conflict. It aims to provide, through publications and discussion forums, the best possible analysis on strategic trends, and to facilitate contacts that would lead to the development of better public policy in the fields of military power and international relations and security. Headquartered in London, the IISS has offices in Germany, the US, Singapore and Bahrain. The IISS Strategy, Technology, and Arms Control Program is based in the IISS-Europe office in Berlin and seeks to provide objective analysis of trends in global conflicts, the strategies and technology employed to achieve security policy aims, and how arms control can support achieving these aims.

The Stockholm International Peace Research Institute(SIPRI) is an independent international institute dedicated to research into conflict, armaments, arms control and disarmament. Established in 1966, SIPRI provides data, analysis and recommendations, based on open sources, to policymakers, researchers, media and the interested public. Located in Stockholm, Sweden, SIPRI offers a unique platform for researchers from different countries to work in close cooperation. The Institute also hosts guest researchers and interns who work on issues related to the SIPRI research programmes. SIPRI maintains contacts with other research centres and individual researchers throughout the world. The Institute cooperates closely with several intergovernmental organizations and entities, including the United Nations, the European Union, the IAEA and the OPCW, and regularly provides support to parliamentary, scientific and government partners.

The Istituto Affari Internazionali (IAI) is an independent think tank, founded in 1965 on the initiative of Altiero Spinelli. IAI aims to promote the understanding of international politics and international relations and to contribute to the advancement of European integration and multilateral cooperation through conferences, seminars, publications and training. It is the leading Italian study centre on defence and security but its scope also encompasses EU issues, international economics and global governance, energy, climate and Italian foreign policy as well as the dynamics of cooperation and conflict in the Mediterranean and Middle East, Asia, Africa and the Americas. The institute provides advice to governmental institutions and collaborates on a regular basis with the European Union, NATO and the OSCE. It takes part in several European, regional and global research networks.

The Vienna Center for Disarmament and Non-Proliferation (VCDNP) is an international non-governmental organisation. It was established on the initiative of the Austrian Foreign Ministry in 2010 and officially opened in 2011. The VCDNP promotes international peace and security by conducting research, facilitating dialogue, and building capacity on nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament. In order to fulfil its mission, the VCDNP conducts conferences, workshops, seminars and other forums to foster results-oriented dialogue and discussion among international organisations, national governments, non-governmental experts, scholars and civil society. Through both in-person courses and online resources on nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament, the Center trains diplomats and practitioners working in Vienna and around the world. In addition to reports and occasional papers, VCDNP experts publish succinct reference briefs and explainers on multilateral nuclear governance, organisations and regimes. The VCDNP offers outreach and other programmes to engage young women and the next generation in arms control, non-proliferation and disarmament field.
